If you don't want to see any of the panes, click the button in the upper-left corner of the Layers panel to collapse the panel so it looks like Figure 7-1, and makes it possible to manage all the layers together. You may or may not want to use this button depending on the way you organize your work. If you want to use Photoshop's full features, you'll want to keep the Layers panel visible when editing. Asylum Seekers Gear Up for Another Appeal Bid Asylum seekers have long been told that they must risk their lives just to have a chance at winning the opportunity to apply for refugee protection in Australia. In reality, refugees and asylum seekers have been the lucky ones. After years spent waiting to have their visa applications processed in full, they may still be months away from knowing if they'll be allowed to stay in Australia. The not-so-lucky group of asylum seekers are those trying to apply for asylum. Most of them are currently in detention on Manus Island and Nauru. After years of watching Australia's previous foreign immigration policy fail, they hope their luck will finally change. Six years ago, the Rudd Government introduced Operation Sovereign Borders. The controversial policy, which remains in place today, has had little to no tangible effect on increasing the number of refugees and asylum seekers being resettled. During that time, the Prime Minister has been forced to repeatedly apologise. She has also been accused of poorly assessing asylum seekers, preferring to take in people who should not have been allowed to apply in the first place. From time to time, some Australian politicians will promise to reduce the wait time for asylum seekers to have their visas processed. But the truth is that they've not yet managed to agree on a solution. One possible solution could be proposed by the Parliamentary Secretary for Immigration, Senator David Feeney, who said it was critical the Government continued to manage the processes at the centre of the issue. He said asylum seekers must be screened appropriately so that they don't "putrefy in human misery for months". This week, the Department of Home Affairs confirmed it was still processing new applications for refugee determination. Most of these applications are now being processed as part of the new permanent humanitarian visa arrangements. Asylum seekers on Manus Island and Nauru have long been the only ones to have their visas processed each year. So, the Department can say it's no longer processing new applications for protection under the United Nations Convention on Refugees. Several countries have started to offer temporary protection visas to refugees who are waiting to have their asylum claim processed. For example, in Malaysia, the word 'protection' is replaced with 'receipt of temporary leave'. The minimum waiting time for asylum seekers in Malaysia is now two months. The lucky ones who win this visa
